DEMOCRATIC RULE WILL BE SHOWN UP

By the Republicans in Congress as One Quite Bad for the American People.

(SPECIAL TO THE TELEGRAM)
WASHINGTON, Nov. 29.—Although the Republicans may in the coming session of Congress give support to the administration's program (it depends whether the party in power makes it a party matter), they do not intend to follow such a non-partisan policy on other questions.

The Congress which is to be ushered in at noon on December 6 is the one that will close the Democratic administration after four years of trial before the people. The coming session is that one in point of time that always furnishes the campaign material of both parties.

The national conventions in all probability, will be held while the session is still wrestling with vexatious legislative problems, and Republicans intend that the record of the party in power shall be fully discussed, both in Congress and on the stump. Democrats, for their part, profess no fear for the result, and claim to be ready to "point with pride" to what they have accomplished.

Republican leaders, however, have made it very plain that their purpose is to prove that the people have not prospered under Democratic rule, and that it is impossible for that party to legislate for the industrial and economic welfare of the country. The idea of the Democrats that their tariff has had no opportunity to demonstrate what it could accomplish is not to be permitted to go to the voters as a sufficient answer as to the cause of present conditions.

Democrats admit their embarrassment over the revenues. They could not deny it if they tried, and just where and how they are to obtain revenues sufficient to meet the ordinary current expenses, even without taking the increased cost of "preparedness" into consideration, is a problem to which no two groups of Democrats can give the same answer. There is a deficit in the treasury today of $35,000,000, and it will be there when Congress convenes. Had it not been for the special war tax, which expires by statutory limitations at the end of the year, the deficit would have been upward of $100,000,000 more.

Unless the war taxes are reenacted (and that is the present plan) the treasury will start the new year with what amounts practically to a deficit of more than $100,000,000. Republicans will assert that had the tariff not been cut so ruthlessly by men who knew little or nothing about tariff construction, it would not have been necessary to impose a war tax burden upon the people in a time when the country is not at war. They say that the Democratic tariff is not even a tariff for revenue, as it has not yielded sufficient revenue.

Democrats meet this kind of talk with the assertion that had there not been a general European war, and imports and exports had gone on as usual, the revenues would have been ample to meet expenditures, as the lower rates would have stimulated imports, at the same time lowering the cost of living to the consumer. The war tax, they hold, was absolutely essential to make good losses brought about by the world-wide disturbances to business.

Again, Democrats, in replying to their Republican protective tariff opponents, declare that war conditions have stopped foreign manufactures and shut off the export trade from the countries engaged in the conflict. This condition, so far as it bears upon American domestic industries, Democrats say, has the same effect as a prohibitive tariff. In either case there is no export trade from the countries affected, and no receipts from tariff duties on their products because they are not brought into the United States. No matter how high the tariff rates might have been, Democrats say as things now are there would have been insufficient customs revenues.

With bonds out of the calculation, and no hope for added receipts at the custom houses, the only alternative would seem to be internal taxation and an increase in the income taxes. Both of these probably would be mighty unpopular. One wing of the party wants war taxes, with the particularly irritating items eliminated, re-enacted. The other wing says these taxes will hurt in the campaign. Which ever way the party in power looks for funds it finds an embarrassing array of disconcerting facts and arguments, but money the government must have.

The Republicans do not intend to attack the president. There will be no personality in the debates in the coming Congress. But the party is to be arraigned before the bar of public opinion and, if possible, convicted and sentenced to retirement from further responsibility in connection with the administration of public affairs.

Republicans contend that the policy of their political opponents is fundamentally and inherently wrong and that in practically every piece of legislation they have written into the statute books this has been proved.

The state of the finances will be pointed to as the great, glaring sign of the disaster unless Republican policies and principles are readopted and that party restored to power. The Republicans profess to believe that they have abundant material upon which to work and they say that they will lose no time beginning the attack all along the line.

DEMOCRATS TO HOLD A CAUCUS

Just One Week from Today to Prepare for the Coming Session of Congress.

(SPECIAL TO THE TELEGRAM)
WASHINGTON, Nov. 29.—One week from last Saturday the Democrats of the House of Representatives will meet in caucus, and that will bring the eyes of the country at attention on a Congress that is sure to make important history. After nominating their candidate for speaker and other House officers, and after Chairman Shirley's report from the special budget committee, should the meeting promptly face the big problems of legislation which have to be met in this session, the multitude of embarrassments which beset the party in power will make their first appearance as stern legislative realities.

The party in control has only a twenty-four majority, which is not very much of a reliance to lean on when it is divided and split up on every important issue. To begin with, it will be led by a man who isn't any more in tune with the White House in this Congress than he was in the last one. Congressman Kitchin is as cordially opposed to the president's program of military and naval preparedness as he was to the president's program for the repeal of the canal tolls clause in the last Congress. He is even opposed to the retention of the one cent rate on sugar which means a saving of $40,000,000 a year to a government that is millions in the hole and running behind at the rate of several millions a week. Was ever a party in such a ludicrous position? Is being asked here, with a leader in the House charged with leading a fight for laws few of which he endorses. Charged with the responsibility for providing revenue for a program that he disapproves, Congressman Kitchin the most ardent devotee of the administration's legislative schemes are openly suggesting the propriety of his resigning.

The biggest question before the Democratic party just now is "getting the money," getting it to make up a great deficit which is daily growing greater, and getting it to defray the cost of the president's preparedness program. The question of revenue raising is in a chaotic state at present. Aside from the probability of retaining the present duty on sugar, regarded as a revenue and not a protective rate, and the re-enactment of the special war taxes, no definite program is in sight and Congress on the eve of beginning. Additional propositions include a sale of Panama bonds ($240,000,000 worth of them authorized but never sold; the canal built and paid for under Republican administration out of current revenues; an excise tax on the production of war munitions, automobiles and gasoline; a duty on wool (for revenue, not protection); a federal inheritance tax (a majority of the states already have such a tax), and an increase of the income tax to "get" the men who receive what are termed "the small incomes."

The prevailing idea among the Democratic leaders is said to avoid as far as possible anything which looks like a concession to the Republican doctrine of revenue from customs duties, which duties might at the same time afford protection to American industries and laboring men.

The Democratic attitude is highly satisfactory to the Republicans, who hope that the party in power will adopt all the proposed systems of internal taxation to emphasize its policy, which will be played up strongly in the Congress, of indirect taxation through customs duties and incidental protection to industry.

Another subject to be brought up at this session is likely to prove a bone of contention. Announcement is made that the administration intends to make as part of its party legislative program a bill giving greater measure of self-government to the Philippines.

It is known that the Republicans are prepared for a tussle on this issue. At the suggestion of Minority Leader Mann, Representative Miller of Minnesota, made a second visit to the islands last summer and is said to be ready, as he was in the last Congress, with a mass of new data bearing on the Philippines affairs, supposedly unfavorable to the plan of the party in power.

JAPAN LEADS ALL NATIONS IN FISHERIES

One Person in Twenty in Empire is More or Less a Fisherman.

(BY ASSOCIATED PRESS)
TOKIO, Nov. 29.—Reports just compiled show that Japan is the leading fishing nation of the world in the number of people who make their living from fishing, in the relative importance of fisheries in domestic economy, in the ingenuity and skill of the people in devising fishing apparatus, in the preparation of fish and in the interest shown by the government in promoting fisheries.

It is estimated that one person in twenty in the entire empire is more or less of a fisherman. Fish appear in some form on the table of every Japanese family daily, if not at every meal. The annual value of water products is over $30,000,000. Half a million boats are engaged in fishing of which 18,000 are more than thirty feet long. Almost a million men are professional fishermen and 1,400,000 more give part of their time to fishing and the rest to farming or other pursuits.

A thousand species of fish have already been identified in Japanese waters and almost every one of them is edible. One of the commonest, most wholesome and most sought after is the shark, which the western people have never learned to eat. Dogfish, a member of the shark family, found along the north Atlantic coast would never be permitted to go uncaught in Japan and even the octopus is a table delicacy. Much fish is eaten raw.

The prominence of fisheries is attributed to the encouragement of officials who have studied the fishing industries in the United States. The imperial fisheries institute at Tokio is one of the finest in the world.

DARKEN GRAY HAIR LOOK YOUNG, PRETTY

Old-Time Recipe of Sage Tea and Sulpur Colors It Naturally.

Don't stay gray! Try Sulpho Sage today and you'll be delighted with the way your hair looks, so dark and glossy. No one can possibly tell that you darkened your hair, as it does it so naturally and evenly and quickly. You dampen a sponge with it and draw this through your hair, taking one strand at a time; by morning the hair is darker and softer and another application of two or three hair becomes beautifully dark.

Prove that you can have dark, natural-colored hair just as you want it. Be sure, though, to ask for the bottle of Sulpho Sage, the kind that everyone uses at your drug store.
